四、閱讀測驗【請依照段落上下文意，選出最適當的答案】

第一篇：

Low-carbohydrate diet books have been topping best-sellers' lists for many years, but many doctors and dietitians have publicly warned that low-carb, high-protein diets are very likely to be imbalanced and potentially dangerous. One dietitian, Sheila Kelly, says Americans are always looking for the "quick fix" diet plans. The attraction of the low-carbohydrate diets lies in their claim to help people reach the goal of rapid weight loss. Perhaps the most famous low-carbohydrate, high-protein diet is the Atkins diet. A person who chooses this diet might have a ham and cheese omelet with sides of bacon and sausage for breakfast, a hamburger (without bun) for lunch, and a steak for dinner. Kelly describes that such a diet functions as a "seductive" concept. This diet emphasizes that dieters could "watch the pounds melt away" while they eat "all of the high-fat foods" they want. Americans, on average, spend more than $33 billion a year on the diet industry, but they are not getting any thinner. According to the Journal of the American Medical Association, the number of obese people in America has been rising every year. Dr. Atkins' low-carb diet first became a hit in 1972. Thirty years later, when he re-released his diet book with the new title "Dr. Atkin's New Diet Revolution," the sequel still became a national best seller, an indicator that the public was still very much into this diet at that time. Even in the 21st century, this diet is still practiced. According to Dr. Atkin, Americans' weight problem, mainly obesity, comes from the fact that they eat too many carbohydrates. His contention is that most people blame fat for their overweight problem. However, the true culprit for making people fat is actually the fat converted from carbohydrates by excess insulin. For Kelly, and other dietitians, the high total fat and saturated fat content in the Atkins diet is the main cause of their concerns.

【2】41. What will be a good title for the above passage?

- ① Principles of a Healthy Diet
② Truth about Atkins Diet
③ Americans' Health Problem
④ Importance of Health

【1】42. Which item should not be included in a dieter practicing the Atkins diet?

【1】43. In Line 8, the word "pounds" can be replaced with _____.

- ① kilograms
② meters
③ sizes
④ dollars

【2】44. In Line 13, what is the meaning of "very much into this diet"?

- ① People like to criticize this diet.
② People are deeply attracted by this diet.
③ People are informed of this diet.
④ People resent this diet.

【4】45. What is the main reason for health experts to be worried about the Atkins diet?

- ① This diet does not include vegetables.
② This diet is expensive.
③ This diet is too strict for people to follow.
④ This diet may result in people's intake of too much fat.

第二篇：

How would you react to someone who tried to sell you a car that runs on fresh air? Perhaps you would think he was peddling potentially planet-saving technology. More likely, you would dismiss him as a conman or even call the police. That is precisely the pitch being made by French auto engineer Guy Nègre, a good-humored man in his mid-60s who claims to have developed a state-of-the-art car powered by compressed air: one that produces a fraction of carbon emissions of a standard engine, reaches speeds of more than 30 mph, travels 65 miles on a one-minute recharge and, best of all, costs just a little over £3,000.

Nègre is quick to point out the drawbacks of existing eco-car technology. "Whatever people may tell you about hybrids, they are only marginally less polluting than the most efficient combustion engines," he says. "Hydrogen power is expensive and impractical. Fuel cells are pricey and unproven, and electric cars are based on costly and unreliable battery technology."

Given the number of false green-auto dawns, you might wonder why air-powered vehicles should be any different. While Nègre's air cars have similar carbon emissions to electric cars (it all depends how the electricity to power the pumps that fill their air tanks is generated), he argues that air power is a superior technology. "Compared to electric cars, air-powered cars cost a much lower price to buy, they don't need expensive batteries to be replaced every five years or so, and crucially they take a comparatively much shorter time to recharge."

I confess I was so skeptical that I reserved judgment until I had driven one of his cars. The version I drove was an early prototype, a three-wheeler with no bodywork, steered by a joystick. OK, it didn't deliver the smoothly upholstered power so beloved by conventional car enthusiasts. And it possessed all the glamour of souped-up lawnmower. But it worked, easily reaching speeds above 25 mph in the limited space of the factory car park. For those who hope to get around in a very eco-friendly way without insisting on power and speed, I do see the future.

【4】46. What is probably a "conman" (in the first paragraph)?

- ① a rude advocate for some ideals or for a revolution
② a confident person who is always positive about everything
③ a crazy expert highly obsessed with technology
④ a liar who tricks people in order to get their money

【2】47. Which of the following is TRUE about Guy Nègre?

- ① He was a French environmental activist who protested against air pollution regulations.
② He was about 65 years old when the author met him.
③ He was a serious person who never joked about anything.
④ He invented an eco-friendly car using hydrogen as its power.

【1】48. Which of the following is NOT one of the advantages of the air-powered car?

- ① greener, or cleaner, than an electric car
② lower cost than that of a hybrid or electric car
③ no need to replace expensive batteries every few years
④ shorter time for recharge

【4】49. What is TRUE about the author's test drive of one of the air-powered cars?

- ① The author drove the latest model of Nègre's air-powered cars.
② The car had three wheels and was controlled by a steering wheel.
③ The speed of the car was 25 miles per hour as its maximum.
④ The site of the test drive was the parking lot of where the car was made.

【3】50. What did the author think about the air-powered cars after he tried one?

- ① They were obviously not as good as the inventor Guy Nègre had said.
② They would be only suitable for milder drivers like women or the elderly.
③ They might not be powerful or fast enough, but could fit the basic needs.
④ They would never be popular unless they come in four wheels.
